Mr. Cross,

As I'm sure is true with you, many people ask me for assistance in various forms. Sometimes it requires little communications, such as a request for $15 can simple be responded with the $15. However, often it requires additional dialog. Two examples come to mind. The first being the various requests made by my kids last year, and the dialog ceased so only one of the requests was fulfilled. Another is a dialog that started several weeks ago where I have been requested to spend about a week at a friend's home while they go pick up an elderly relative in Pennsylvania.

This required dialog, which led to adjustments for them and me to allow us to fulfill the request. I am schedule to be at their home this Thursday night. While I find joy being out in the country, it is not my home so it is not my desire. However, to love friends, I will do what I do not desire. How much more do you think that would be true if it was dialog with my own family, including extended family?

In case you haven't noticed, the <http://family.kozlowski.org> has grown a lot and some of it has started to show up on the public <http://distinctivist.com>. I hope you will find that this is a serious effort on my part. In particular "Isaac – My Encouragement" (<http://distinctivist.com/2017-07-04>) was discussed today with the wife of "Matthew", who is mentioned on the page. You see, some actually see me as an ally.

I hope you find my discussion of Gal 2:14 clear enough in <http://family.kozlowski.org/2017-06-24>. The website is part of the effort. An email being prepared is another part. My plan is to send it out once I return from my time in the mountains.

I will offer again that we should get on the phone before the email is sent to review our situation and the email. The offer is set before you. Assuming no response, my plan is to set the website "before some" once I return, and sometime later "before them all".

Respectfully,

John Kozlowski
