Gentlemen,

I had a fun distraction (business meeting) today that I thought you might enjoy knowing about. We talked in years past (some of us) about the all-electric Tesla cars. Today one was used to deliver a box to me. One perspective of the photo below is the honor guard watching the joyful delivery guy. Actually, the guy on the left is Nirav Patel, the gentleman I am contracting with. The guy with the box, a computer of course, is Saurin Patel, a distant relative or Nirav.

Nirav's dad bought the car since Nirav puts a lot of miles on the highway and has had more than one close call. The Tesla is mostly self-driving. Not a bad car for about $100,000.

We did drive up the road to a restaurant for some sushi. On the way there a good part of the trip Nirav did not have his hands on the wheel or feet on the pedals. You could tell the car was doing OK, but not perfect. On the way back he did pass another car with remarkable briskness. It was a moment of fun.

While it was an enjoyable hour, I have lost all desire for a car. I just wanted to share the novelty of the day with you.

I love you all.
