Subject: On Higher Education

I listen to a podcast from Timothy Kelly about twice a week. He is Roman Catholic and once a week he does a program with Joe Atwell who is non-Christian. I enjoy the programs because they are deep, there is much to learn, much to agree with, and very much to disagree with.

Joe Atwell also lives in Santa Barbara, my home town, which was recently hit by fires and a massive mudslide. It does add a personal tie to the dialog as I can often picture where he is talking about. To add to that he is currently in New Zealand. Nirav Patel is also vacationing in New Zealand with his family.

I listen to this week's program, "Powers & Principalities Episode 34" (https://www.podomatic.com/podcasts/tkelly6785757/episodes/2018-01-13T03_51_35-08_00) and think it might be worth your time. It is an hour long. They discuss the higher education system which is something that is very relevant as I still have a lot of young kids.

There is the easy comparison in that my wife has a degree but does not use it, and I haven't even completed the first year of college, but use the skills I started to develop in my early teens still 40+ years later.

But there are even more important things and most were addressed in the program. A point that was mentioned is how a particular field is taken over by putting in your select people and waiting a generation. This can be seen in numerous examples starting with Rothschild in the banking industry, John D. Rockefeller in the medical industry, and I think it was J. P. Morgan who funded the takeover of the press many years ago. It is today called the mockingbird press because of Operation Mockingbird of years ago. However, that is supposedly no longer, however how many remember when Obama signed the NDAA for the last time he funded a new propaganda arm for the US Government?

But it goes one step further. It is easy to find the history of Rockefeller's similar influence in Christian seminaries. Rockefeller was strongly tied to Rothschild and together they were behind numerous efforts, such as Scofield. They put a lot of funds and political muscle behind his bible commentary to get it published and distributed even with huge losses since making money wasn't the goal. What is often noted from this is the subsequent Balfour Declaration and the formation of the State of Israel, which has nothing to do with the Scripture, but now has the backing of much of the Christian community.

This goes much wider in that the influence of seminaries of long ago is seen today in those who supposedly proclaim the Scripture. It is not hard to find commentary about how there are issues in this area.

The bottom line is what about my kids. Are they being setup to become debt slaves of the higher educational system, indoctrinated by them, and culturally debased from the experience? As mentioned in the program, do they have any training in logic? I recommend some of the videos on that subject by Jason Lisle, which are easy to find and a pleasure to view.

Are my kids being trained to trust the medical community rather than the Lord, the protection of the state rather than the Lord, the guidance of the institutional church rather than the Lord?

Are they being prepared to give an answer for the hope that is in them? Clearly they don't have that model set before them, except from their dad. But is that hidden from them? I would be more than open to dialog on this, but history shows that the most I would get is one email. The offer is on the table anyway.

I love my family, and continue to set a model before you that no one in the family is to be rejected. My effort to reconcile with Jim Cross is significant evidence of that, even though it is not reciprocated. But again, I will keep on trying with him, my kids, and my wife!
