Family,

I just got an email from my friend David Tulis who published an article about his experience with his daughter while she was in court. You might find it an interesting read. A video about it is attached.

“Perjured trooper wins case, but nets grievance for calling Tulis 'Nazi’”

You can see that David was able to invest time in his daughter considering the statement: “A homeschool girl who had had 3 years of mock trial, she was in familiar territory in preparing for her defense.”

But even well prepared, they are no match for closed ears and a rigged system. You may have heard it said that “the institution protects the institution”. I have stated it repeatedly. David describes how he saw it lived out.

When you deal with an institution, you should consider that if there is a challenge to the authority of the institution, you will probably see a collective defense against facts, reason, and love. Consider the most dramatic case where it is demonstrated that an institution has no authority or even no right to exist. In that institution are people whose livelihoods and pride are based. They are not going to give up willingly, irrespective of truth. A lesser form of defense, especially when it is only money involved, and if it is an employee, simply fire them. If it is a more major issue, employee or not, the troubling party can be killed. All these things occur and not infrequently.

The difference between when this happens in the institutional church, is that at least some claim to be based on the Scripture. While I contend this is faulty reasoning, we will use that example. The institutional church might do anything to protect itself, from firing an employee, killing an offending party, sending the police to shut them up, closing their ears, or rigging the system. As with the secular comparison, all these things occur.

Consider again David’s article. He attempted to protect his daughter from the institution of the state. My desire is to protect my daughters, my sons, my wife, and even Jim Cross from the institution that calls itself a church, and instead point them to the Lord Jesus Christ who never commanded an institution be formed, EXCEPT for the family.

Consider the statements:

The Bible is true and the institutional church is a fraud.

Marriage begins with sex and ends with death. See <http://kozlowski.org/2018-12-08+1>

I can back those statement up from Scripture. If you submit to the Lord Jesus Christ and disagree, can you do so rationally from Scripture? Please, be the first in the family to try.

I love you all!
